This is a picture that I took at Alam Square's pedestrian bridge from Chamran Boulevard in Shiraz, Iran. I was 15 when we moved to Shiraz and I have to take a taxi from here to my high school every day. At the time I did not know the city well enough and I was worried that I could easily get lost, and without my phone, that would be a huge problem. However, since it is a fairly crowded area, I chose to not ask anyone for help and force myself to figure it out by myself. I marked everything that I could in my mind to remember exactly where I should get out of the taxi; shops, the pedestrian bridge, bus stations, billboards, trees, sculptures, etc. This way at least I have a mental image of the place that I can trust!
